

The dogs assure me:
There are volumes of meaning -
Life and death -
And time;
Past, present, future -
In the scent of a rotting fish left after the flood,
Or a trace of scat,
Or the coyote, long passed,
But not everyone reads poetry.

I'm not so lucky, all told:
The rich scent of meaning -
Heady, intoxicating -
Rises only from words
And the way you rest your hands on the table.
